

Matt Sawers (QPM, MBA) enjoys an enviable reputation in UK policing including the lead in growing a nine-force collaboration from zero to the current highly performing Counter Terrorism Unit in West Midlands (2004-11) - the first outside London. Subsequently, as Detective Chief Superintendent, he provided strong operational leadership within UK police network in several notable counter terrorist operations.

Previously, Head of the Murder Investigation Unit (2000-04) he oversaw many high profile murders investigations, serious crime cases and critical incidents including demand-led kidnaps often with national and international dimensions. Matt also led the Review portfolio for several years on behalf of ACPO (Homicide Working Group).

Matt is now undertaking new challenges and responsibilities as a consultant focusing his rare blend of skills towards business change programmes concerning service delivery, cost reduction and technology. Specialties: Wide operational and organisational experience in local and national policing contexts and proven skills in modern complex security and law enforcement cooperation across boundaries; integrating technological solutions within preventative, investigative and protective methodologies.
